WHEAT AND SILVER.

Recent Big Rise in Wheat
Does Not Sustain Silver
Mens' Argument.

San Antonio Express.

The statement that the price of wheat is governed by the price of silver does not hold good with silver stationary and wheat climbing toward the dollar mark. It is evident that the law of supply and demand that has ruled the prices of the staples since time immemorial is making a practical demonstration of its immutability. The regrettable feature of the present high price of wheat is the fact that little good comes to the farmers thereby and possibly considerable hardship to the consumers. Wheat is now all in the hands of the speculators, the farmers having, of course, sold their holdings as fast as threshed. If, as it is claimed, the future supply is short, an era of high price may prevail that will last through another season. The Courier-Journal, in reviewing the situation, says:

"The remarkable advance in wheat the past three weeks has amazed old operators and surprised the country. At first thought it would seem that it is simply the swing of speculation that has with its Midas touch marked up the value of one commodity after another, deserting petroleum for stocks, and leaving stocks for the grain pit. An advance of 16 cents in two weeks and of 30 cents over the lowest point is so phenomenal as to stagger calculation.

The advance, it should be remembered, is made after a long period of stagnation. July wheat touched 82 cents in Chicago yesterday; it was 77 1-4 cents last Wednesday; a week before it was 66 3-8 cents; two weeks before it was 62 1-2 cents, and a year ago it was 56 5-8 cents. Cash wheat is now selling at 80 cents in this city, and last September a great deal was bought as low as 48 cents.

"Predictions are now freely made that wheat will go to a dollar a bushel soon. Its statistical position favors the supposition that the range of values will be permanently higher. The visible supply, as reported by the Cincinnati Price Current yesterday for May 18, was 56,484,000 bushels, a decrease of 3,000,000 bushels in the last week, and of 6,000,000 bushels compared with one year ago. Receipts at the primary markets are also much less. The aggregate for forty-sixty-six weeks of the wheat year of 1894-95 is 145,031,000 bushels. Last year the receipts were 153,641,000 bushels for a similar period and for 1892-93 they were 250,193,000.

"In the language of the trade, 'wheat has cornered itself'—in other words, there is a shortage in the visible supply and the crop prospect is poor. Nearly all the available stocks are held in Chicago, Duluth and Minneapolis. St. Louis has exhausted all her supplies and her millers are bulging in Chicago. It is believed that the bulk of the stocks is held by Armour and Counselman, who have been buying steadily for months. It depends upon them how the market goes. If they decide to accept their present enormous profits, they may begin selling and break the price, or at least check the advance. Or they may go on and try to reach the dollar limit.

"It is a matter of regret that this boom comes too late to benefit the farmers now; but if it shall establish a higher range of values for the next two or three years they will be enormous gainers. Those to profit most will be the residents of the great wheat belt of the North west. Lands in the Dakotas, Wisconsin and Michigan should rapidly appreciate in value; and the large wheat ranches will make the owners rich in a few seasons with abundant harvests. There's the rub. High prices and big crops do not go together."

THE LAST SAD RITES.

The Gresham Funeral Arrives

In Chicago and is Escorted to Oakwood.

Chicago, Ill., May 30.—The remains of Walter Q. Gresham were laid in the vault in Oakwood cemetery this afternoon, there to remain until the members of the family have decided upon a place of final interment, either in Oakwood or in some other cemetery of Chicago.

General Gresham loved Chicago and it loved him. It revealed today the affection it bore him and the esteem in which it held him when fully 23,000 people lined the streets which the funeral cortege passed and crowded the cemetery while the body of the national premier was placed in the resting place, from which it will be taken only to the grave. Never in Chicago since the day when the dead body of Abraham Lincoln was carried through its streets has Chicago testified so fully her loss at the death of any one man. The streets and cemetery were packed with a crowd so dense that they could be packed no closer.

For hours before the time set for the arrival of the train thousands of people stood waiting in the sun, which bore down upon them with tropical fierceness. As the hearse passed slowly along every head was uncovered in respect to the illustrious dead, and during the short services, before the body was finally placed in the vault, the cemetery for the distance of several hundred feet around was filled by a crowd which stood without sound or motion until the last of the rites were concluded.

Every sphere in life which the dead had filled and adorned was represented at the grave. The hands which bore the casket from the car in which it came from Washington were the hands of men who had fought with him in years gone by. The men who walked before the casket as honorary pallbearers were men who had sat beside him when he graced the federal bench and upheld the nation's laws with the same frank and fearless spirit in which he upheld its honor on the battlefield. There by the open vault stood Grover Cleveland, the man who holds the highest office in the gift of the American people; and there stood the other men, those of the Grand Army of the Republic, whose hearts were full of love and the spirit of brotherhood for Walter Q. Gresham, as well as they had in the dark days of the nation's life held firm his faith and kept pace with a full, free step to the music of the union.

At one side of the vault were drawn up squadrons of the famous "Fighting Seventh cavalry," and in the background were the dark blue ranks of the Fifteenth infantry. They stood motionless at "present arms," and when the last of the commitment service was over the buglers of the Seventh stepped forward, raised their bugles and in clear notes sounded "taps." No other military honors were given, and the tributes to which the exalted rank and eminent services of the dead man justly entitled him were, at the wish of his family, dispensed with.

In fact, none were needed, for the fame of the man had shown as a soldier, a jurist and a cabinet minister is secure with the people who loved him so well.

Light kid gloves are still worn, and white, maize and lavender, stitched with black, are the prevailing tints.
